DUANE CREGGER

A series of fairy-tale paintings
exploring the intersections
of disappointment,
prudence, childishness,
and dark playfulness.

DUANE CREGGER is a Virginia artist working in oils, acrylics, and mixed media. His work is a narrative of his rural-to-urban migration experiences. Through color, texture, and mark-making, he builds visual dialogues with multiple layers of paint, suggesting an accumulation of subconscious ideas and experiences. Most recently his work was seen in the Hulu special series, Dopesick, directed by and starring Michael Keaton.

Cregger has won awards in various juried exhibitions, including the juried biennials at Roanoke College's Olin Hall Galleries and William King Museum. His work is in corporate collections in the mid-Atlantic, in private collections across the United States (including that of actress/director Drew Barrymore), in the Caribbean and Canada, and an arts philanthropist purchased a work from the series in this catalog as a gift to the Roanoke College Permanent Collection.

His paintings have been featured in Élan Magazine, American Art Collector, Cottage Style by Better Homes & Gardens, Home & Design, Richmond Home, Traditional Home, and the Better Homes & Gardens Home Decorating Guide.

He is a founding member of the Appalachian Spirit Artists Cooperative in Marion, Virginia, and has been twice appointed to serve on an advisory panel for the Virginia Commission for the Arts. He lives in Richmond, Virginia, and maintains a studio and gallery space at Crossroads Art Center. Studio visits are by appointment.
